- I was a presenter in this session, so won't give feedback on how it went
- It is tough to design and implement evaluations. This participant (or neighbor) driven way to evaluate programs with the focus of improvement has potential to provide innovative tools to other agencies. Interesting mix of academic knowledge (PSU researcher), community knowledge (community based agency), and lived experience (neighbors who used the program themselves working as paid interns) to design, implement, analyze a brief study.
- Really valuable information shared about the participatory model that was shared. I definitely learned a lot and really appreciated the time and effort put forth to create an informative and engaging session!

- I thought this session was incredibly informative, insightful and invigorating. It was awesome that Cultivate included participants in their housing and employment programs who were able to develop research skills and showcase their connections to the community that made this research a success in the short timeframe they had to work with.

(optional) Please share any recommendations for how to improve our ability to discuss and collaborate on this topic
